GEN² March 16, 2020China's First Billionaires And Their Secretive Puppets 16 Hangzhou, the capital of Zhejiang Province on the east coast of China, is a city that few Western tourists bother visiting. It's one of China's cheapest cities to live in. It's full of communist-era apartment blocks with cramped bedrooms and communal living rooms, and even its infamous canals look more like a collection of small streams than a main waterway. But most people come to Hangzhou for its serene gardens and breathtaking scenery, and for the ancient West Lake, the third largest lake in China and a UNESCO World Heritage Site. What you won't find in Hangzhou, though, are the multi-million dollar homes and high-end cars paraded down the tree-lined avenues of Pudong, the financial district of the city. An exception is one man: Yu Bo. He is China's first billionaire and owns perhaps the most expensive apartment complex in the country. He's not just the first billionaire, though, he's also one of the most secretive. Mr. Yu, as he's known, is nicknamed the Iron Man of East China.

He's the owner of one of the region's biggest steel companies, the deputy director of Hangzhou's city development and reform commission, and a member of the regional party's top decision making body. He also happens to be the owner of a secluded island in the Western
