To attenuate the audio output, Ice9 uses the Saturation mode, which simulates a channel or a band output compressor. The plugin's compression ratio is controlled by two parameters: 1. Threshold: This is the audible signal level, and the audio is muted when it reaches that level. This value is expressed in dB. 2. Ratio:

This value specifies how much of the signal will be reduced when compared to the input level. The LFO (Low Frequency Oscillator) creates waves that range between  $\pm 0.1$  Hz and  $\pm 10$  Hz. The Amplitude of the LFO is automatically multiplied by the input level before the limit is reached. This means that, for example, if an input level of  $-120$  dB is applied, the LFO will create waves with amplitudes of 120 dB and 10 dB. In addition, the LFO is attenuated in order to reduce its overloading effect. The LFO is attenuated proportionally to the level that is applied to the input. For example, a low level of -4 dB will only attenuate the LFO up to -10 dB. The plugin is re-enabled once it has stopped attenuating, and the threshold level returns to its previous value. Ice9

---

Limitations: Ice9 is designed to stop attenuating the audio signal once it has attenuated it to a certain point, but not to stop completely. If the user decides to take the audio down to zero dB, the audio will be completely muted.

Ice9 Plugin Info: Ice9 can be used in a number of different ways. 1. As the front-end for a monitoring solution, it can be used to limit the volume of music, to protect digital audio signals or to protect the ears. 2. As a post-processing solution, it can be used to reduce the volume of background sound when monitoring the output of a system. ICE9

Limiting the Volume of Audio/Music: To protect your ears, you have to remove the volume from the studio's audio signal before it reaches the ears.

You have three possibilities: 1. Dual-monitors, active one is used as a reference signal 2. Digital input audio monitoring, out active one is used as a reference signal. 3. VU meters, each VU meter can be used as a reference, both meters are placed and one is used as a reference signal. ICE9 Limiting the Volume of Background Noise:
